TRANSLATION TEAMS ARE EQUIPPED WITH LAPTOPS and software to facilitate the translation and Scripture engagement processes. But conditions on the mission field—high humidity, ocean air, dust and sand—are destructive to a computer's hardware. It is essential to purchase high quality machines. This ensures optimal function and avoids delays (of a month or more) if a machine needs to be sent out for repair. Even with better products, laptops typically need to be replaced every three to five years for the entire language program team.

Laptops are more than simply tools for an everyday workplace. Equipping partners with the technology to efficiently do their work improves the quality of translation and Scripture engagement materials.
